Teaching Philosophy

Learning to paint isn't about learning formulas or special techniques but rather learning how to see. While there are many technical aspects of painting the most important part of an artists development is to see the truth of the painted subject.

As a teacher I have the privilege of assisting my students clarify and strengthen this knowledge and understanding. Sometimes this learning requires words and sometimes a visual demonstration. My greatest joy is seeing the spark ignite in my students when the connects are made and this is why I love to teach.

Learn About

Have you ever picked up a piece of fruit or flower and just been inspired to capture its colours and shapes? Or have you wanted to create still life paintings infused with life and movement? The ability to transcend the literal and see beyond the subject matter is just one small thing you will learn in this fun filled workshop. Using fresh flowers, vessels and fruit for subject matter this workshop is designed to inspire and further your knowledge and understanding of painting. You will explore composition, light movement, harmony and unity. The skills you will learn in this workshop will not only enhance your development as a still life painter it will also overflow into other painting genres such as landscape and portraiture.

You will learn

- form
- light movement
- chiaroscuro painting
- and LOTS more

Due to the time frame the objective is to create at least one small still life painting. (No bigger than 45cm).
